Course Description
Customer service has become more problematic based on social media's influence on the public, who increasingly feels entitled to what they want—regardless of rules, regulations, or the law. The course focuses on providing service at every juncture of dealing with the public to increase trust in your police department. Specifically, it discusses: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. The role of reciprocity and how sworn and civilian department employees must respond. Ex: taking complaints, returning the property of a crime victim, finger-printing for work requirements, taking medications for prisoners, FOIA requests, taking statements 2. External publics: Residents, business owners/their employees, church personnel, educational institutes, volunteer organizations, and all elected officials (the Mayor, City Council members), etc. 3. Internal publics: City Administrator, department heads, all employee groups. 4. Primary tenants of quality customer service: work ethic, employee attitude, employee character, and verbal and written communication skills. 5. The right brain/left brain balance of human civility and competency that greatly impacts quality customer service, and with Police Departments can equal trust. 6. Mindfulness of nonverbal and verbal citizen cultural behaviors religiously based.
